A DANGEROUS HILL

Danger lurks on the Crowfoot Hill. The accident which occurred when a truck struck a parked coupe shows how close to danger is the motorist who uses this main highway. It was a bit of good fortune that there were no fatalities, but the accident was serious enough, resulting as it did in injury to one person. The owner of the car is partly to blame for parking his car in such a position that it, together with the stalled truck, partially blocked the road. But he was a victim of good will, and his desire to assist the driver of the stalled truck possibly caused him to overlook the danger in partly blocking the road. Aside from the danger of accidents of this kind, the Crowfoot Hill is still a hazard for the motorist.

During the past few years at least two cars have gone over the edge of the road here and been smashed up, injuring drivers and passengers. In one instance the driver escaped death by a miracle. They were bowling along the level prairie, travelling very well, without warning. Suddenly, without any reason, they were confronted with the steep descent at the Crowfoot Hill. Brakes were slammed on, but the car rolled over the road and rolled over. They might have been killed had the gods of luck been a little less kind.

The other accident referred to was of a similar kind. Nobody knows how many more near accidents there have been on this same hill, but we venture to say they are many.

The Crowfoot Hill is the most dangerous spot in the high-way between Medicine Hat and Calgary. To the stranger it is particularly dangerous, for he comes upon it without warning and is unexpectedly topping the crown of the hill he sees the steep descent and the widest at the bottom which looks barely wide enough to allow while car to pass. The sudden application of brakes is liable to throw the car into the ditch. That is exactly what has happened on at least two occasions.

Last year a sign was placed on the side of the road near the top of the hill. It bore the words "Danger, Steep Hill" in red and white letters. Red reflectors should also be attached to the sign so that it can be readily seen at night.

The suggestion is a good one. A sign of this kind would be much more effective than the small signs now in use. We would also suggest that more grading be done on this hill to reduce the steep pitch and provide a more gradual approach to the hill proper. Widening of the grade would also lessen the danger of an accident.

These improvements should be made immediately. No time should be lost by the provincial department of public works, for the busy tourist traffic season is approaching, and hundreds of motorists, strangers on this highway, will be using the road for the first time.

The improvements should be made now, before there is a fatal accident.

PROTECT THE WHEAT

Wheat crops in this vicinity are threatened with a new menace—the gopher. Already serious damage has been done by gophers, and unless they are checked they threaten to overrun some sections of the country.

The gopher's natural enemy, the weasel, has been greatly reduced in numbers during the past few winters. The weasel population has been decimated by amateur trappers and the result is that the gopher, his blood-thirsty for nearly exterminated, has lived and multiplied at an alarming rate.

Those who claim to be familiar with the habits of the weasel claim he provides the most effective means of keeping the gopher in check. He kills large numbers of gophers the rapid increase of this prevents the rapid increase of the gopher. Since the weasel is such an excellent ally of man in fighting the gopher pest, it would be well to move to give protection to the weasel.

The value of his pest is small in comparison to the value he gives in service rendered as a destroyer of gophers. He does not destroy crops, being entirely a game animal.

In view of the unfortunate result of weasel trapping in this district, it would seem that his protection in future is most desirable.

A request that the provincial game guardian investigate the gopher-weasel situation here should bring good results.

A man in Pittsburg who has been unemployed for three years and receiving relief for a year, has inherited $25,000 from his grandfather in Wales. He says he is going to make up all his losses and then on the next day he doesn't like, and then take a trip to Europe.

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE CO. OF CANADA

Well nourished bodies are the foundation of good health. Good health is a luxury, but slender figures reach a degree of thinness which is as unhealthy as is over-weight. There are tables which give the average weight for individuals, according to age, sex, or height. No particular person is an average person, and a table of averages is merely guides. The best weight for each individual is the weight at which he enjoys the greatest amount of health. In most cases, this optimum weight is no far from average. A person who is definitely above or below the average would find it worth while to consider the cause.

To get this insight, taking food that the body uses. To gain weight, more food should be eaten than the body needs. This applies particularly to the use of such energy foods as potatoes, bread and butter, cereals, fat meats, cream and oils. Any excess of food taken is stored away by the body in the form of fat, and so the body is likely to be fat.

This does not mean that weight is to be gained by eating food that is not good for the body. To attempt to do so only causes digestive upsets, and the weight would be lost. The additional food required might be a mid-morning meal, or a mid-afternoon lunch, or by having something to eat before going to bed. An extra helping of butter at each meal and a more generous use of dressings on salads, will make a real difference.

Meals should be taken at regular hours and the food served an attractive menu.

This people are often overfatigued. When the body is unduly tired, digestion is interfered with. In such cases a rest before meals is indicated. Weight will not be gained unless rest is secured. The person who is underweight requires extra hours in bed and a rest at noon.

Fresh air, sunshine, moderate exercise and the outdoor life are essential in the process of gaining weight. A change of time must be established, and this frequently includes a different attitude which will release from the tension of overactivity which are so commonly experienced by those who are underweight.

Questions, concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

GRAIN QUOTA EXPORT

PLAN IS SUGGESTED LONDON, June 21—A quota system for exports of wheat by the principal exporting nations of the world was suggested as the wheat conference met today.

Canada, Australia, Argentina and the United States are represented. The discussions were adjourned, however, when Mr. Hon. Stanley Bruce, Australian delegate who yesterday promised Australian cooperation, even to the extent of temporarily limiting production, which Australia does not like—asked for further proposals in order that he might submit them to his government for consideration.

Limitation of production by way of reducing acreage and the curtailment of exports by a quota system, among the nations are the main lines on which the conference is working while at the same time urgently pleading for some agreement by exporting nations to limit production whereby they might raise consumption.

Some quarters are inclined to the view that no enduring solution to the wheat problem is possible without Russia.

It was understood discussions of the big four may be resumed before the end of the week.

MAY SUSPEND DISCUSSION OF MONETARY ISSUES AT LONDON

LONDON, June 21—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and other leaders at the world economic conference were understood this afternoon to be considering the radical step of suspending discussions of monetary matters and dealing only with the economic problems in order to bring the possible reworking of the conference under the currency stabilization fund.

Gold standard countries were still taking about a fortnight to complete the conference pending stabilization of the American dollar and other major currencies.

Conference leaders late in the day were advocating the possibility of a satisfactory compromise being effected by a temporary abandonment of monetary affairs.

THREAT MADE TO DUMP UNITED STATES WHEAT

CHICAGO, June 21—A threat by secretary of agriculture Henry W. Wallace that United States might dump its surplus wheat on world markets unless other production countries agreed on restrictive measures to keep prices at Chicago as Kansas City today.

Serious damage reports to the domestic crop also contributed to the advances, but the speech of Wallace, before the National Millers' Federation meeting, though late, was credited as the major stimulant.

His remarks were part of an explanation for the government's insistence on wheat acreage production during the next three years. He stated that the United States still had a 360,000,000 bushel wheat surplus, and that with rising prices farmers might be inclined to acres acreage, with a resulting 800 million or 900 million bushel crop and an additional surplus of 200 million bushels.

PORTER FLY PLAYS HAVOC IN ONTARIO

PORT WILLIAM, Ont., June 21—Only partially checked by a sudden shift in the wind, a raging forest fire tonight defied efforts of 200 rangers and firefighters to quell it, and swept over a 15 mile stretch of cut-over timber lands near Port and 55 miles west of here. Over 100,000 acres are burning at several places in the eastern section of the Township Bay district.

THREE KILLED IN FLAX CRASH

PRINCE ALBERT, Sask., June 21—Three men were killed in an airplane crash near the Brooks air base at Emma Lake tonight.

When Buying Was an Experiment...

"I'll try a pound of this," said grandmother, "if you are sure it's fresh."

That was sometime in the second hour of her morning's search for groceries. She went from one open barrel or open box to the next, along an unappetizing row of crackers, tins, cereals, dried fruits, lard and sugar—all in bulk. She shooed the flies away, looked at, touched and tasted each article suspiciously, and finally decided to buy or not to buy, as her judgment directed. She couldn't trust a servant to do it. It was a day's work in itself.

Today, in two minutes, you give the proper your order. You know that everything you get will be fresh, pure, attractively and cleanly packed. Why? Because you asked for advertised brands.

Advertising has taken hours of hard labor out of every housewife's day, and lines of worry off her forehead. It has made the morning's marketing a matter of certainty instead of guesswork.

Do all of your buying this easier way—read the advertisements!

ELINORE BARRY

By Elmer D. Barry

"One black November day Joyce looked over a photograph of a smiling Irishman in Chicago. No one remembered her, two years later when she awoke one morning to find herself in a luxurious home in California, with a wedding ring on her hand, and a pleasant young man addressing her as Phil. Telling her to be careful after her fall from her horse of the day before, her husband was Neil Packard, rich fruit packer. Confused and troubled, she tried to find out more about herself and from letters in her desk found that she had been a heartless, frivolous young woman and had become involved in a serious affair with a man named Dickie. Later, when he came to see her, he was surprised when she tried to repulse him, but he finally left. Joyce met Dickie, only the servant, and asks him to get her a dog. She is still out in the garden when a stranger approaches. Joyce meets the doctor, later Mr. Phil Packard calls, and then a young man, Phil. The story ends. Now go on with the story."

Joyce's heart sank as she examined her guests, wondering who they were. The second of the guests was a blonde girl, whose plumpness gave definite threat of turning her into a fat woman of middle age. Her features were of the curved heavy variety, her eyes small and gray, her mouth lipsticked into a pouting capital 'O' of the most disconcerting variety. Both girls were dressed in smart, but faded, and somewhat shabby, clothes, and Joyce instantly recognized them as the latest out and about, completely wrong for her figure and height. The other young woman, who looked several years older, wore a blue dress with sharp features, stiffly starched and with green, yellow, and lavender patterns. Both women were smoking cigarettes, and Joyce instantly recognized them as the latest out and about, completely wrong for her figure and height. "What did you do all day yesterday?" demanded the blonde one. "You weren't in bed, were you?"

"No, I fell rotten," replied Joyce. "What did it come to you? It's a wonder we're not viewing the result of it. How did it happen, anyway, Phil?"

"Oh, forget it," said Joyce. "It's all over now. I hate post-mortems."

"Yes, so do I," agreed the dark one. "I guess I gave you a shock, though, didn't I, Phil? You don't seem to have much sip today, some how. That's what Malt told about you, said you acted half dead."

"Did he? Well, that's the way I felt, but it's better than being completely out."

"I'll say," said Joyce. "I've been suddenly she started violently and let out a terrible oath. "Who let him in here?" she exclaimed shrilly. For Dickie had come up behind her and pushed his cold little nose against the plump pink hand which hung over the arm of the chair."

"Where did the car come from, Phil?"

"Here mine. Sorry he scared you come here, Dickie," she jumped up and sitting back in a chair, took Dickie in her lap, facing calmly on the two faces of the girl.

"Are you coming out to 'Tear' the dog this time?" said Dickie.

"Why, no. I'm not going anywhere this week," answered Joyce, trying to speak in a careless manner.

"Come on, Ethel," said Dickie. "You'll never go around in less than a hundred and fifty if you don't get out on the course more than once a month, you poor fat lady female."

"Ethel" up, resignedly and panted. "Well, come over tonight. I won't be natural to see you so quiet."

"I know where you can get a cat and a parrot. If you're going in for pets," said Dickie, on her way out.

"Thanks," said Joyce, looking at her. She was so thoroughly disgusted and repelled by Ethel and Dickie that she could not bring herself even to attempt an imitation of them.

"It's all over, and I will turn to me alone."

who she supposed was her Phil's maid. She accompanied them to the door, and watched them get into the bright car. At the opening in the high wall, they turned and she let another machine enter, and Joyce's heart gave a disconcerting leap when she recognized Maitland's handsome face in the grey roadster that was entering. She could not bring herself to believe that he might come upstairs without an invitation. Therefore, she was distinctly startled when he calmly walked into the room, looking for her.

"Hello, sweet! Everything O. K. now? Did you get a good night's sleep? Look better to see you smoking, Phil. It gave me a funny feeling when you refused a cigarette yesterday."

Joyce had taken a cigarette when he came in and lit it quickly. As he approached her she retreated a step. Before she could reply to his words, however, he became aware of Dickie who jumped up at him with instant friendliness.

"Well, Hello, old fellow. Where did you come from? Boy! You've never had any time since before!"

"I expect to have more now," he replied. Joyce coughed, though her heart was beating with suffocating surprise, because I don't have you to take up so much of it."

Maitland looked at her with a smile. "What's the big idea? Am I going to be treated as if I'm the latest piece of news?"

"You are," said Joyce. "I mean that whenever there's a new piece of news, I'm all over it."

"I'm through," she said. "I'm through. As she spoke Joyce moved toward the door. "Please move downstairs, I prefer not to discuss the matter up here."

Maitland followed her and attempted to put his arm around her, but she stopped suddenly and ran down the stairs into the living room.

"Oh, well, all right," he agreed.

But, Phil, I've never seen a doctor like that. What you're saying and doing. You can't mean it, sweetheart! What's the use of going through all this noble drama for nothing? It's such a waste of time, and we could be so happy. Every minute when we're not together means a waste of time to me. Oh, sweet, I love you so. You know that."

He came up to her, his voice thick, his handsome face intense.

Joyce hastily moved around to put her chair between them. "If you can keep your hands off me," she said calmly, "I'll simply refuse to talk to you."

"I'll say," said Joyce. "I've been suddenly she started violently and let out a terrible oath. "Who let him in here?" she exclaimed shrilly. For Dickie had come up behind her and pushed his cold little nose against the plump pink hand which hung over the arm of the chair."

never talked this way before." He leaned forward and suddenly seized her wrist in an iron grip, exclaiming, "Phil, do you think I'm going to be thrown out like this with no more reason in the world than that you're through? Well, you're damn well mistaken. You think so, I'm going to stick around and find out what you're up to. Before me. You're going to be mine, and by God, I don't give you up to anyone else without a fight."

"Don't be so melodramatic," retorted Joyce, "and let me go, you heartless man."

Her very calmness seemed to disarm him. Mechanically he took his hand away. Then, resting both elbows on his knees, he plunged his hands through his short, black hair with an eloquently despairing gesture.

Joyce's spirits rose a little. She began to feel more confident of victory. She rose, and still holding Dickie, she continued, "You might as well go now. I haven't anything more to say. It won't do any good to keep me."

He little said and looked at her searchingly. He was still in the mood of the day before, and with unexpected calm, he said, "Whatever you say, go. But don't think for a minute that I'm through."

Joyce said nothing. Maitland walked out without another word, without attempting to kiss her again.

When Joyce awoke it was past six o'clock. Dickie had left. She was slightly alarmed, she hurried downstairs to find him. Suppose he had not come home! She discovered him, however, in the kitchen calmly finishing his dinner, while she watched him closely.

She returned to the living room to wait for dinner, and there found on the table another pile of letters from the doctor.

"Please mail them," she said. "I've sent you the latest Blackstone-Love, Neil."

There was Neil's dead? wondered Joyce, puzzled. She glanced again at the room. "I've already had nothing so workmanlike as a duck in it."

When she had finished her dinner she remembered Neil's telegram. "I've sent you the papers and read them immediately. There must be a study or 'den' somewhere in the house. Perhaps they've called it a 'library.' Where would it be? A little remote, suggested to her that the natural location was probably behind Neil's dressing room, in the wing opposite the bathroom door."

She passed on the staircase hall inside the room when she had opened the door, and a shaded lamp gave out a dim light. Exactly in the middle of this luminous circle lay the chair of her search. "I'm through," she said. "I'm through. As she spoke Joyce moved toward the door. "Please move downstairs, I prefer not to discuss the matter up here."

HIGH MARKS IN HARMONY
Students of the versatile member of Bassano's younger set is shown by the meritorious manner in which Miss Florence Playfair has during the past year, carried a heavy load of course, and taken practical work in piano, and finally obtained honorable mention in harmony paper.

Some enlightening facts relating to this test may be gathered from the results of these examinations has been awarded in any of these mention in the qualifying test.
